During our siesta Krishna Prasad proved the very good N. C. C. cadet that he was. He was given the order "pipe down" many times, I guess. Even in his sleep he kept repeating the words, "pipe down".

As we stopped on the main road to the temple of Lord Shiva to take some snaps, we heard some passers-by remarking, "This seems to be a hippy gang" or "This looks like a circus party". Swamy, with the red ribbon tied round his head to prevent his hair from covering his eyes, looked like a Red-Indian of the Western movies.

At 5 P. M. we started back to Guntur. Cycling with the wind, we reached Guntur by 7.30. All the way back I kept singing "Hot Sand! I was walking on the hot sand!" because my cycle-seat was just like hot sand. At Guntur we rested for the night in the same hostel as in the previous night.

After breakfast in Guntur we started back to Vijayawada at 7.30 A. M. On the way we stopped at Mangalagiri, for some drinks. Near the Krishna barrage we stopped to take some photographs. By this time Jeji was completely exhausted. But he finished the trip like the brave Ethiopian of the Mexico Olympics. By 11 A. M. we were back again in the hostel.

On the whole, we covered about 95 miles cycling nine to ten miles per hour. This trip was a memorable one, not because Amaravati is a place of historical importance, but because it is the place where we went on bikes, singing songs, cracking jokes and silently bearing the pain in our legs.
