'Translators need to be well-versed in both languages'

Dr. M. C. Das, management coordinator and former head of the Department of Commerce, spoke at length on the art of translation, stressing that every translator should be able to translate in both directions. He said before any translator can be called a professional, he/she must be well-versed in both source language and target language, such as English and Telugu, in its grammar, culture and habits. He gave some examples of the translated text. He also noted the one-day technical workshop 'The Challenge of Translation Studies and Creative Writing' organized by the Department of English of Andhra Lovelya College.
